Lets Talk About Freedom In Iran

Regime Change in Iran

USPA NEWS - Only 29 days left until the anniversary of Mahsa Amini's murder.
Every day, the people of Iran are more enthusiastic and excited as they approach the one-year anniversary of the tragic death of Mahsa Amini and the one-year anniversary of their own uprising for freedom in Iran.
The people of Iran have fully understood that the oppressive and murderous regime of Khamenei has no legitimacy or qualification to rule in Iran. The people of this great and historic land have raised the cry for freedom repeatedly in the past year and have sought support from all countries around the world. However, for valid reasons, as I have discussed with many of them, the Iranian people explain why they did not receive the serious support they expected. The awareness of the Iranian people these days far surpasses the narrow perspective of Khamenei and the IRGC.
It was a very interesting experience for me when I talked to the people of Iran and explained their interpretation of the sacred uprising for freedom in Iran. They seek equality, a peaceful nation without violence, and the separation of religion from politics.

I have spoken with many people inside Iran, including youth, women, and men of various ages, and I have conducted my own research. At a high likelihood, I anticipate that the oppressive regime of Ali Khamenei and the elimination of the terrorist IRGC will soon Fall Down And Big Revolution is in the way by the people Of IRAN.
Because this is the right of these people. When I talk to them, I feel that each individual among the Iranian people, regardless of their age, is more capable than the corrupt politicians and the religious government of this country. The people of Iran possess a very high level of knowledge. They have explained to me why the uprising for Mahsa Amini is still alive after about a year and why the current Iranian government is deeply afraid of the anniversary of her murder. Their explanations were very noteworthy.

The people of Iran have defined democracy.

These days, the people of Iran are saying that after a few months of Mahsa's uprising following her murder by the regime, it subsided due to prudent reasons, and the lack of substantial support made them content. The first reason is the presence of government traitors; if the uprising had continued with the same intensity, it would undoubtedly have been defeated by these traitors.

The second reason is that the people of Iran are a peace-loving nation, unwilling to resort to violence. Another explanation they provided is that during the hiatus of a few months, they practiced collective action and learned civil protests.

The third reason is that despite the significant casualties after Mahsa Amini's uprising, the Iranian people managed to convince the religious segment of society that this government has no connection to religion, and they now have the support of this segment as well.

The next reason is that the Iranian people knew that the government had no solution other than defeat, and if they continued protesting on the streets, the oppressive regime of Khamenei would brutally suppress them. Therefore, they paused their activities, hoping that perhaps the high levels of poverty and government corruption would lead some military forces in Iran to join the people and reduce the intensity of oppression.

The fifth reason is the alignment of all countries with the people of Iran, not the government of this country. The Iranian people believe that due to the country's substantial financial resources and wealth, convincing other countries to undermine the Iranian regime was a challenging task. After witnessing the corrupt Khamenei regime's intervention in Putin's unjust war against the oppressed people of Ukraine, they decided to provide European, Asian, and American countries with sufficient time to recognize the severity of the threat posed by Khamenei's corrupt regime. They want these countries to understand that if this regime continues to exist, it won't ensure security for any nation in the world and poses a danger to all people.

The Dangers Of IRCG And Islamic Republic Of Iran Is So Clear In This Days For Everyone In The World By Seeing of IRGC drones in Ukrainian cities.

The Iranian people believe that during the initial days and months of the revolution, the corrupt government of Iran remained powerful and had support due to various reasons, including the presence of numerous terrorist groups such as Fatemiyoun, Hashd al-Shaabi, Hezbollah, and many others. However, the current pause has gradually led the Iranian government to withdraw its support for these groups, as it is facing severe financial weakness and is unable to provide even basic necessities such as gasoline, water, and bread for the people these days.
Finally, they are eagerly anticipating the start of September 16, 2023, which, according to their own words, marks the beginning of a marathon towards the complete downfall of the Islamic Republic government and Khamenei. The people of Iran, undoubtedly with their extensive knowledge and awareness, believe they will emerge victorious.
I hope that all countries around the world and the global community will support the Iranian people in their quest for a more peaceful world.
